

What do I need to do?

If you have been caring for someone else's child in your home for 28 days or more and are not a close relative (grandparent, aunt, uncle, step parent (including civil partnerships), sister or brother), you should contact Cumbria Children's Services to notify them of the caring arrangement.

If it is intended that you will be caring for someone else's child in your home for 28 days or more, and are not a close relative, you should also contact Cumbria Children's Services to notify them of your intentions. Then a social worker should visit the child in your care within seven days and check that the arrangements are suitable. A Private Fostering Assessment will need to be undertaken to ensure that as carers you are able to meet the needs of the child you are caring for.

They can also help with other support including:

- Advice on claiming benefits and possible funding for some essential items;
- Parenting support and advice;
- Help in bringing families in crisis back together.

Are you looking after someone else's child?

What is private fostering?

If you are looking after someone else's child for 28 days or more, and this has not been arranged formally by Cumbria Children's Services, then this could be a 'Private Fostering Arrangement'.

A 'Private Foster Carer' is someone who is looking after your child and who is not a close relative (such as your parents, or your adult sister or brother) and who is not paid, unless by you. Step parents are treated as close relatives if they are married to the parent. Brothers and sisters-in-law can be classed as close relatives too.

Why are children privately fostered?

Children will usually live with a private foster carer because their parents or the person who they usually live with cannot look after them for a while. Often, children in private foster care are able to live with a relative or a friend who they already know. A private fostering arrangement might happen for a number of reasons.

Make a compliment, comment or complaint

You can make a compliment, comment or complaint about the service you receive on 0800 121 8800. If you require support we have an independent advocacy service contactable on 0300 330 3131.

Who else needs to know?

Not everyone needs to know that a child is being privately fostered – but Cumbria Children's Services, your child's school, and your doctor do need to know, and anyone else you want to tell.

What else does the social worker need to do?

Your social worker should advise you if they believe that the new arrangements are not suitable for the child, so that you can make better plans for the child. They can help you to come to a written agreement with their parents to cover essential matters to do with the child's care. The social worker will visit the child every six weeks after the first visit, for the first year, and more frequently if the child wants them to.

Are there any time limits?

If the child is staying away from home with someone other than close relatives for less than 27 days then these rules don't apply to you. If the child is over 16 then they don't apply either, unless he or she has a disability.

It is an offence not to notify the local council of a private fostering arrangement.

What about my rights?

The parents of the child will continue to have parental rights, and responsibility for the child(ren). This means that you must provide as much information as possible, and work out an agreement with them.

What if there's a problem?

If there's a problem, you should tell the child's social worker. There is a space on the back of this leaflet for their name and telephone number.

If there are any changes?

If you change your address, or if the child(ren) move back home or somewhere else, you should let the social worker know as soon as possible - ideally six weeks before it happens.
